Aim High is a highly structured therapeutic respite program in Shoreline, WA serving teens and young adults with autism and related developmental differences.

Aim High supports families by providing quality enrichment experiences for their loved ones while they do the important task of recharging and taking care of themselves. We offer individual and small group activities that foster learning and encourage practice in the areas of self-management, interpersonal effectiveness, flexibility and frustration tolerance while building independent living skills such as grooming and other self-care routines, basic money and purchasing skills, and organization, planning and follow-through. Programming is individualized based on the strengths, interests, and needs of each participant.
